Yes, legalizing the biggest casinos in the world IS an expansion of Gambling

(Tallahassee) – If there is one thing casino gambling interests and politicians are really good at, it's trying to twist the meaning of words to suit their purposes. Last weekend, a column in the Palm Beach Post explored how gambling proponents can't bring themselves to say the word "gambling" when describing what they are trying to legalize. Instead, they're peddling the ultimate euphemism: "gaming."

But the logic gets even more tortured. Sponsors of legislation that would lead to the world's biggest casinos being built in Florida contend, believe it or not, that their bill does not "expand" gambling. Nobody is buying their line, but that didn't keep them from serving it up again in op-ed columns this past weekend.

So today, No Casinos is launching a 30-second ad called "Definition" to show how far some politicians will go to quibble about the definition of words for which everyone knows the meaning...
